Crafting A Theology of Stewardship is a call to the local church to re-visit and re-think their beliefs and practices in the area of stewardship, generosity, money, and giving and then to re-calibrate and re-cast those beliefs based on the teaching of scripture.

In this eBook, Joel Mikell lays out seven perspectives that should be at the heart of a theology of stewardship and presents five significant value propositions that will result. Joel also suggests a step-by-step strategy for creating a written document that articulates a theology of stewardship for the church and provides several examples to guide the process. The last section lists twenty helpful resources in the areas of stewardship, giving, and generosity.

A carefully articulated and defined theology of stewardship should be the foundation and compass for all things financial in the church. If it is done biblically, prayerfully, and methodically, it will educate, empower, encourage, instruct, challenge, grow, affirm, and guide you and your church in the journey to create a culture of extraordinary giving and extravagant generosity.

Solid, Articulate, Eye-Opening

By Tim Stevens

I started reading Crafting A Theology of Stewardship with a bit of expectation. Okay, I had a lot of expectation. I'm tired of the same ole' drivel when it comes to talking about money in the church. The bar was pretty high for what I needed from this book by Joel Mikell.

My expectations were met. It is biblically sound. It is easy to read. It brought me back to "why" my giving matters, and it had me considering the condition of my heart. Joel doesn't write from the position of a pastor or non-profit executive who will benefit (financially) from you listening to his advice. He is a life-long follower of Jesus, and a business man who has a heart to help others learn the joy and freedom in generosity.

I especially like the illustration he shares about his grand-daughter Addison who, when encouraged to give in the offering at church, exclaimed: "I don't want to give to the church--I want to give to people!" That is the heart so many carry. But sometimes the church confuses the message and gets in the way of what matters.

Joel writes for everyone--but there are especially great take-aways for pastors and church leaders who are trying to get this right. This book includes a practical, step-by-step approach to increasing the generosity-quotient in your church.

If you can't tell, I highly recommend this book.

"A Must Read for Pastors"

By Tom Pfizenmaier

As one who has lived in the stewardship laboratory (translate: local church) for the last twenty-eight years, Joel Mikell's wisdom comes as help from heaven. We need more than a "cut and paste" Bible verse approach if we are going to move from stewardship campaigns to stewardship cultures in our churches. Joel's work has already been seminal in the life and teaching of our church, and I can attest to its transformative influence and power. This little book is a crisp, clean read and everyone from pastors and congregational leaders to the person in the pew will benefit from it. This is great stuff!

Changing the Stewardship Culture

By Glenn Doak

"Crafting a Theology of Stewardship" is a much needed addition to the study and practice of stewardship for the local church. Joel Mikell moves logically from what scripture says about stewardship to the why and how of a theology of stewardship. It is a good workbook/guide for a church looking at changing the stewardship culture for the first time to those who have studied this many times.

Joel speaks very clear language and this easy to understand book has lists of ideas and practical suggestions in a great format. The five examples of crafting a stewardship theology from real churches is valuable as well as the Appendix with its long list of resources. A very quick and good read.
