A 'Blessing in Disguise' Christmas Present

By KES

In one day, Lindy gets locked in a store, loses her could-have-been boyfriend, gets fired, and has to take a job at a place she detests. Seems like Santa skipped over Lindy this year... or has he?

I've "purchased" several of Lisa Scott's "Flirts" when they were available as freebies and they're always a really good way to spend 45 minutes - and this story is no exception. As with the other Flirts, there's enough time to actually build a little romance between the hero and heroine - and I really think that's what sets these stories apart from other short stories out there. The hero and heroine are given some time to spend together, share some experiences together, and build a little foundation for a relationship. There's also a bit of time for character development which helps to further enrich the story.

In this story, I initially found Lindy to be a little shallow and 'looking her nose down' at a certain thing in the story. I didn't know if I'd like her or not, but, as the story rounds out, you find that everything is not what it seems. In the end, the story was fun, humorous, sweet, and a little emotional. This is a great way to spend a few spare minutes during the holiday season.

Lindy's bad Christmas?

By scarlet

On her way to a blind date, Lindy stops off quickly to replace some ripped stockings. But the manager of an upscale boutique ends up stuck in the dressing room of the bargain basement store overnight. This costs her a dream job, but will it bring her a dream man? Holiday Rush is a mid-length short story, which gives enough room for good character development of both Lindy and Alex and enough time for the relationship to seem real. I'm a "Flirts" fan and I think this is one of my favorites of the whole series. However, I strongly suggest buying the entire "Holiday Flirts!" collection, because the stories are interconnected and while this stands alone, it's more fun to read what comes before and after.

Rush to read "Holiday Rush"

By Elaine's Picks

The first story in the new "Holiday Flirts" romantic short stories. Picture a "fashionista" locked in a discount store dressing room after the store closed. Sounds like a good start to a really fun story about finding love in an unlikely place. I have enjoyed all the "Flirts" but with the holidays coming up these are just what you need to get the season started. Download this and read it while you wait in all those holiday lines - it will surely reduce your stress, put a smile on our face and give you that warm feeling we all get around this time of the year. Enjoy.
