Presents the Philosophy of Reflexive Interactionism: everything exists in systems of two or more entities connected to each other so that each perceives the world, and at least part of what each other perceives, at the same time. This is shown to be a basis for understanding the connection between meaning and logic, autistic perception, and the explication of the first brain-mind theory. All of these are topics that have been previously considered to be beyond the scope of existing science, yet they are shown to be simple and logical phenomenon, even though they are unfathomable and difficult to understand.

Durig moves beyond the realm of Autism

By Sunset West

This book kept me up until five in the morning. I loved this book so much, that reading it felt sinful.

Is science the only road to knowledge? What is a mind? How are brains connected to the mind? How is all of this connected to our perception to God? This is the sort of book that makes armchair philosophers and cosmologists giggle with delight.

Durig uses an abundance of big words to communicate some sophisticated concepts. Prepare yourself to look up some of the bigger words up in Wikipedia.

Durig is a nice guy with a big heart from my experience. In truth, my personal like for the man probably clouds my judgement about this book.
